carried on a division of 28 to 10, the minority including eight members who belong to a Church which regards marriage as a sacrament, and is indissoluble. Public interest was stimulated in regard to this measure while it was passing through committee, and when at last the issue was fairly raised, it was agreed to discuss it fully on the motion for the third reading.

After the passing of the English Act, a despatch, dated 12th April, 1868, was transmitted by the Secretary of State to the Governor of this colony, favouring the adoption of a similar measure. The bill introduced by Mr. Buchanan differs materially from the English law by giving an equal right of divorce to both parties to a marriage in case of infidelity.

The clause embodying this principle is the 13th, which provides:—"It shall be lawful for any husband to present a petition to the Court, praying that his marriage may be dissolved on the ground that his wife has, since the celebration thereof, been guilty of adultery; and it shall be lawful for any wife to present a petition to the Court, praying that her marriage may be dissolved, on the ground that, since the celebration thereof, her husband has been guilty of adultery. And every such petition shall state, as distinctly as the nature of the case permits, the facts on which it is founded to have such marriage dissolved is founded."

The Council is debating the measure, and it is thought that the second reading will be agreed to, the bill will be amended in committee so as to make it like the English Act.

A bill has been introduced into the Legislative Council, to take effect on the 1st of January, 1871, in relation to the census of the colony.

It is proposed to take the census on the 2nd April, 1871, being the nearest decimal period to the census of 1870, taken in the colony of New South Wales.

The whole of the British possessions were taken. Hitherto the census of this colony has been quinquennial, but as it was not deemed expedient to the growth of the colony, and the proposed period was named, as it was supposed that about the same date the British census would be taken.

In 1821 the British census was taken, and the population of the colony was 28,781. In 1828, 36,081—showing an increase of 7,300. In 1833, 60,861—showing an increase of 24,780. In 1838, 70,000—showing an increase of 9,140. In 1843, 130,585—showing an increase of 60,585. In 1848, 180,000—showing an increase of 49,415. In 1853, 220,000—showing an increase of 39,995. In 1858, 260,000—showing an increase of 39,995. In 1863, 300,000—showing an increase of 39,995. In 1868, 340,000—showing an increase of 39,995.

The census of 1868 showed a population of 266,189—showing an increase of 7,000; in the following year, 1869—the year of the separation of the Queensland colony—the census showed a population of 250,000, showing an increase of 8,000. There are no reliable data since that period, but on a rough calculation it is taken for granted that the population may now be estimated at 485,000, or an increase of 135,000 on that of the former census.

The Treasurer (Mr. Samuel) has introduced a bill to fund the debt of £693,000, which is made up of two sums—£445,000 for Treasury bills, and £248,000 for the debt of the colony.

His proposition was simply to have a funded debt to this amount for the colony, the loans under which would be transferable by registration in the books at the Treasury, instead of by the ordinary debentures which were liable to be lost.

He believed that the loan would be very acceptable to capitalists, and would rid the colony of the debt which was now felt of these securities constantly falling due. He therefore moved "That to enable the Government to provide for the payment of the debt of £693,000, a bill be introduced for the Loan Act of 1865, and for the payment of Treasury Bills, it is expedient to authorise a loan not exceeding the sum of £693,000."

That loan shall be negotiable in the colony in the form of a funded stock, by subscription or by such other means as may be directed by the Government with the advice of the Executive Council. That such funded stock shall be transferable only by book-entries at the Treasury.

The bill was introduced by the Hon. William Forster sent in his resignation of the office of Secretary for Lands. Mr. Forster has held office since the 27th October, 1867. Although he has resigned, his position as a Minister of the Crown, he last Thursday night occupied a seat on the Treasury benches.

of State to the Governor of this colony. In final paragraph of the bill, as proposed, he maintained that the divorce mensa et thoro was worse than useless. The woman could not marry again, nor could the man, and nothing could remedy the evil but the absolute divorce proposed by the bill. Mr. McKinnon, seconded the bill, at some length, urging that, although it might be applicable to marriages (so called) by registrar, it could not be to marriages in the church. Mr. Hunt supported the motion, and the second reading of the bill was carried.

THURSDAY, 19TH APRIL.

Divorce Bill.—Mr. DICKER opened the adjourned debate on the Matrimonial Causes Bill, and, after referring to the second reading of the bill, he stated his intention of voting for the amendment and against the bill in its present shape.
